Gaming platform expands living room and multi-screen presence with launch of Twitch streaming channel on Roku players

Twitch [7], the world's leading social video platform and community for gamers, today announced the availability of its streaming channel on Roku® players [8]. The streaming channel enables millions of Roku customers to view Twitch content from any of the gaming platform's 1.5 million broadcasters. In addition, Roku customers who are logged in to their Twitch account are able to easily view the channels they follow, as well as select new channels to follow.

"Gamers are voracious consumers of content, with extremely tech-savvy media consumption habits," said Brooke Van Dusen, Director of Business Development, Twitch. "It's now more important than ever for Twitch to be available everywhere gamers are, and increasingly, that's on set-top boxes like Roku players and smart TVs. The Twitch community has been asking for a Roku channel for a long time, and we're finally able to deliver."

"Twitch has millions of passionate fans, many of whom are Roku customers, and we're excited to bring them gaming action whenever they want it through the new Twitch channel," said Ed Lee, vice president of content at Roku, "The Roku platform offers thousands of available streaming channels to our customers around the world, and the addition of Twitch brings even more engaging, high-quality entertainment that we know our customers, especially gaming enthusiasts, will love."
